Located to the West of the Huntsville city limits, Oak Alley is a design for a Master Planned community that sits on the site of a former plantation near the town of Mooresville. The plan calls for creating a village-like atmosphere reminiscent of days past in the South. There is a village center designed for mixed use, live/work, and townhouse units with a central green space that will cater to pedestrians while still being conducive to vehicular travel.

The rest of the community is designed to contain different residential neighborhoods containing a variety of lot types and sizes with houses that all share the Southern Vernacular architectural style. These houses would be similar in appearance to those found in the historic neighborhoods of the cities of New Orleans and Charleston.
